

Every day, personal choices concerning what we eat impact our environment. For those who choose meat as part of their diet, there's an ever growing number of sustainable producers in Washington who, says farmer Micha Ide of Bright Ide Acres in Orting, are "dedicated to providing our animals with the best care possible and allow them to engage in their natural behaviors."

Options for sourcing local meat from farmers and ranchers includes purchasing online, from farmstores, buying seasonal shares, whole animals or custom cuts. We encourage you to learn more about the farms listed here and other local meat producers by visiting our WA Food & Farm Finder eatlocalfirst.org/wa-food-farm-finder.
